This house, part of a row, was probably built in the first quarter of the twentieth century. It is not located within a historic district and it lacks the architectural qualities to qualify it for listing individually on the National Register. The house appears to be two stories in height with a basement, it is three bays wide and three bays deep on a stone rubble foundation. The house has an enclosed porch on the principal façade, which appears to be on a cement block foundation. All of the windows are vinyl replacements with one over one sash. The house is covered in vinyl siding.
